Frigid air descended upon India's southern coast Tuesday, sending temperatures plunging as far as the freezing point. The weather is set to remain very cold in India's winter capital of Chennai for the next few days. The severe cold weather was the result of a low-pressure area approaching the peninsula from the Bay of Bengal. Conditions are expected to remain so cold until the middle of January. The Indian Meteorological Department (IMD) also said that freezing rain was also likely in Rajasthan. A large number of people in the capital Jaipur and in several areas of Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh have been advised to stay indoors. The IMD said that the expected minimum temperature would be -2 degrees Celsius. Freezing rain would be expected over parts of Gujarat and Rajasthan, it added. Shimmering waves of low pressure moving from the Bay of Bengal towards the Arabian Sea, is responsible for the weather phenomenon. So, are we at war? No, and certainly not an existential struggle. But it is a war of perception and of perceptions. Surely this is far more than just an ideological issue. If we live in a world where terrorists can blow up buildings and kill people by remote control and if we live in a world where the first question of a certain presidential administration is what is the name of the Afghan President's dog, then it's clear that we are in a world in which public expectations have been blown apart. It's not that we no longer live in a world of "public virtue". In the West, there was a time when going to church was a way of confessing your sins. There was a time when the public expected certain manners and standards. Of course, times change. But it seems to me that these changes are real. If we ask ourselves the question what kind of a world we want to live in, how we want to live our daily lives, and not only in the West, then it seems to me that we can't blame globalisation for our woes. The masses don't just feel alienated. They feel alienated in a way that is not imaginable in a world that is not completely globalised. It is not 82157476af
